Mid-Career Laryngology Session

MCL Chairs:

Nazaneen Grant and Scott Howard

Who Should Attend?

The Mid-Career Laryngology Session is designed for physicians who have a minimum of seven years’ experience, generally having completed their fellowship training 7 to 15 years ago (2007-2015).

Goals of the Mid-Career Sessions

Mid-career sessions will explore topics of interest to the private practice and academic laryngologist actively seeking to progress to the next stage of their career, whether that be further honing clinical skills, advancing towards full professorship, and/or advanced leadership positions. The small group sessions will allow for interactive group discussion focusing on the key elements of a number of clinical and non-clinical topics in detail. The registered Mid-Career attendees will have an opportunity to respond ahead of the event to help us focus our conversations.

Acquiring New Skills & Avoiding Crustiness

We all need to take a pause once and a while to look at how we practice our craft. At this point in our career we are doing what works well, but is there a better way? Have we stopped innovating and adapting our practice? Are there specific areas we need to address?

Lightning Rounds - We need your input!

A portion of our day will focus on an interactive discussion led by fellow MCL members who will offer one or more approaches to a problem. Is there another way? Is there any cool stuff you are doing that you want to share? Did you try something that did not go well? Perhaps a nuance of a surgical technique, a new product or a new way of doing things in clinic... What is one thing you can’t live without these days – but it a tool, an organization strategy, a hack of any sort - Please share, and feel free to bring photos or videos – we will have a projector available.
